The game offers three modes to play- the story mode, the challenge mode and also the battle mode. The battle mode is very much like a fighting game rather than an RPG, where players must defeat their opponents until they are destroyed. However, unlike other fighting games there are no controls for this one- it's all automated with each player controlling their own character at the same time across two teams of four characters each.

The story mode can be played by up to four people and is strictly linear, meaning that the player will have to go through each area in a specific order without being able to choose the order. Each level appears as a different area of a map, labelled as areas A1-A8. In each area the player will have to complete a set of objectives once inside, such as defeating a certain number of enemies or collecting an object from every other enemy in the level. The final battle against the boss takes place in an arena-like setting rather than on an indoor map, and there are no generic enemies that appear during this battle. After defeating the boss, players can continue on to the next level. But if they lose, they will not be able to progress any further on the current chapter and must restart from the first chapter. Once finished with Story mode, characters can go through Character development which consists of giving them upgrades to their attack power or improving their stats for better performance within battle. Characters also have two unique skills that can be unlocked by defeating certain enemy types. Character development is saved by using orbs found in each chapter. The battle mode offers three different game modes - Attack Mode, Character Battle Mode and Arena Battle Mode. Attack Mode is the battle mode played by up to 4 players, with each player being able to select their character once they have selected their stage. Each player has two lives, the total number of defeated enemies are recorded under each player's name. Character Battle Mode can be played with up to 8 players but requires at least 2 controllers. Each player must select a character first before entering the game lobby which allows players to set up battles, including selecting which stage to play on and weather effects (if any). Arena Battle Mode is like an arena game where 1-8 players can compete in battle mode, without needing controllers or other devices. The game also offers a series of mini-games and quests that can help players earn additional items and upgrade orbs. Sometimes they appear as hidden areas within the story mode and vary greatly in difficulty, with some requiring players to solve puzzles or gather items from other players.
